History

• Since its inception, the Wisconsin State Patrol has responded to emergency situations resulting from natural and man-made disasters.

• In 1970, that involvement expanded into civil disturbance/crowd control operations when the state’s university and college campuses were exposed to student unrest.

• The State Patrol has been called upon in times of crisis such as the widespread flooding emergency in 2008 where a federal disaster declaration involved 30 Wisconsin counties.

• State Patrol officers served well over 9000 cumulative hours in direct response duties to this event monitoring roadways and other critical infrastructure that were subject to related ground instability issues, providing security and assisting with resident evacuation.

• The response was in addition to ongoing traffic patrol and other law enforcement service levels of the agency that are essential on a daily basis throughout the state.
